

Every year between 5,000 and 7,000 girls are trafficked into Indian cities. Many of the girls are barely ten years old and are sold by poor parents, tricked into fraudulent marriages, or promised employment in towns only to find themselves trapped in Hindustan's brothels joining the 200,000 women and girls who are already slaves to this industry. They are locked up for days, starved, beaten, and subjected to unspeakable acts of violence and abuse.

In 1997, Project Rescue set out to provide global awareness and opportunities for concerned partners to help bring freedom and a transformed future to those imprisoned in sexual slavery. Their ultimate goal is to expand across Eurasia wherever sex trafficking is focused and to eradicate all forms of child exploitation. They have opened eleven havens where sex workers' young daughters find compassion, transformation, and a new meaning in life. Through these shelters and other efforts, their multi-dimensional rescue ministry has brought freedom to over 1,100 young women and girls in India and Nepal.

With the generous support of you and others who refuse to ignore this modern-day slavery, they can continue to rescue victims of sexual slavery; restore their sense of self through the application of Biblical principles; and prepare them for rewarding service in the local community.

The Compelled by Love 5K will raise money to buy a new van for Project Rescue, allowing them to go into another city in India and rescue even more girls.
